Sabbath (No. 32).

Grace faced her ranking with apparent humility on Facebook on Thursday afternoon.

"I absolutely do not deserve to be on this list," she wrote. "And yet there I am. Thanks Billboard!"

Her friends and fans cheered her ranking in the comments — and added that she totally deserved to make the cut.

"You sing with more emotion and power than some others on that list," wrote Jennifer Powrie.

And Aaron Harris had this to say: "You have one the most powerful voices I've heard, and I've heard a lot."

Ranking No. 31 in Billboard's list of greatest rock singers

Billboard's senior director of music, Jason Lipshutz, explained why Laura Jane Grace deserved to be ranked No. 31 on the list.

"Becoming one of the first famous punk rock musicians to come out as transgender in 2012 required an astonishing level of courage from Laura Jane Grace — but the leader of Against Me! had always exhibited a high degree of fearlessness throughout her career, whether leading countless mosh pits or prodding at her identity in her songwriting," Lipshutz wrote in Grace's entry.

"The band's first album after Grace came out, 2014's Transgender Dysphoria Blues, stands as an indispensable piece of rock history, and demonstrated that Grace wouldn't be losing an ounce of her snarl while speaking her truth."

Billboard chose its Top 50 singers from rock groups only, not solo artists or singers in bands named after them (such as Bruce Springsteen or Joan Jett), according to the article.

Grace — who was born in Fort Benning, Georgia (now Fort Moore) and moved to Naples when she was about 10 — was nudged out of the No. 30 spot by Steve Perry of Journey. And the No. 1 singer, according to Billboard's list? Mick Jagger of the Rolling Stones.

Another Floridian made Billboard's list: Jim Morrison of The Doors

Grace wasn't the only singer on the list with Florida roots. Jim Morrison of The Doors — born in Melbourne — came in at No. 21. Morrison, whose father was in the Navy, traveled throughout the U.S. as a youth with his family but at times returned to the Sunshine State.

He once lived with his paternal grandparents in Clearwater and attended college in St. Petersburg before transferring in 1962 to Florida State University in Tallahassee.

There's also the Morrison Family Homestead in Pensacola, a house once owned by relatives where the musician's parents lived for a short time before he was born. The home is in the National Register of Historic Places and part of the Downtown Pensacola Historic District.

"In the late '60s, the Doors' seemingly mythical frontman transcended the bounds of performance, navigating between melancholic introspection and fevered rebellion," wrote Isabela Raygoza in Morrison's entry. "With his brooding charisma, poetic soul and electrifying stage presence, Morrison became a conduit between realms of consciousness and artistic expression.

"His voice, a deep-yet-velvety amalgam of raw power ("Roadhouse Blues," "Five to One") and haunting delivery ("The Crystal Ship," "Riders on the Storm") possessed an otherworldly feel that could plummet into the depths of human emotion, or turn thunderous.

"He transformed into The Lizard King and wore skintight leather pants on stage, often prowling the stage in sinuous movements, an unsettling yet captivating presence. Morrison's seductive provocations and fearless exploration of the human psyche have enshrined him as a timeless muse."

died at the hospital due to injuries from the crash.

Muscarella was also charged with causing property damage. The State Attorney's Office is still awaiting updated reports before a decision is made on any additional charges.

The crash

Troopers arrived at the crash scene — Southeast Hawthorne Road at Southeast 45th Terrace — at about 8:30 p.m. Thursday and were notified that Alachua County sheriff's deputies had detained a man they suspected was driving under the influence. Troopers assisted in both the crash and DUI investigations.

Muscarella was driving a white Kia Soul when the crash occurred, while Johnta was driving a blue Suzuki motorcycle. The crash details were not listed in the FHP report.

FHP noted that Muscarella failed field sobriety tests and, later during transport, become emotional and had a "strong odor of alcohol emitting from his breath."

After being read his rights, Muscarella told FHP he was on his way to a friend's house, and that he had had two or three drinks that afternoon, the report said.

Muscarella refused to submit to a breath test at the Alachua County Jail. He was transported to a local hospital for treatment before being cleared and returned to jail. His bail, pending an update from prosecutors, is listed at $40,000.
